Getting the right stone for your bathroom can make all the difference between a beautiful and practical space, and one that you never use. Choosing a stone that's the right colour, size and shape for your bathroom can be an overwhelming task. But with a little research and common sense, you can make the right decision for your space, and for your lifestyle. What do you need to consider?

Size Choosing the right-sized stone can often be the deciding factor in whether you get the best out of your bathroom and it's important to think about how much space you have before you shop around. If you're a small family, a large-sized floor feature such as a bath or basin can do double-duty for the kids as well as for you. If you have a smaller space, then you'll need to think about tiles that are easily put away for storage or smaller-sized features that are not as "showy".

Colour The most obvious decision when it comes to colour, and consequently shape, is whether you want a classic white wash, or a vibrant splash of colour. If you're not sure which direction you want to go, then you may want to do a trial run first. If you like the effect of a white wash, but a white floor isn't for you, but you want something that will fit with your bathroom design, then go for a floor feature in a dark finish. For a white wash, the most popular choices are traditionally white limestone, white quartzite and white marble. For the splash of colour, our range of white, black and charcoal grouts are both vibrant and versatile, and will blend seamlessly with your choice of stone.

Shapes If you're a fan of symmetry and a classic design, you'll probably want to go for a round or rectangular floor feature. With these shapes, the variations are endless, from perfectly smooth stone surfaces to the smaller, more intricate shapes. If you're in a hurry, but still want to get some inspiration, do a quick search for bathroom floor features on our website. 2d92ce491b
