Thanks to a €140-million contribution from the Province of Brittany, the extension of the line that connects Nantes with the nearby towns of Maurepas and Pontchartrain was made possible. Work is expected to begin in spring 2015 and is scheduled to be completed by spring 2017. The new 2.5km-long LRT line will connect the city centre to the north of the city, primarily in the area of the port, Le Grand Camion and Bléon, as well as to other areas outside the city centre. The route includes a tunnel, which will enable the line to pass through the historic centre. The LRT line will also make use of existing public transport routes, including buses, roadways and ferries. Transport will be provided by the RATP Group, whose network of buses, taxis and metros will be provided by the local operator, ATC. A new tramway, which will connect the LRT line with the centre of the city, is also part of the project. Nantes Tramway Co. SA, which operates the tramway, expects to begin work next year. Nantes is the second city in France to receive a light rail transit (LRT) in the past two years, after Lille. In December, Lille's LRT line became operational. The operators of the Lille line, Keolis, say the line has been running "smoothly" since it opened in December last year. According to SFR newswire, SNCF, the operator of the Paris tramway, has said that the first phase of the tramway project in Nantes "is in its final phase" and is close to completion.From the man who raised the first bounty in Europe for the heads of traitors to the youngest POW we ever had at Stalag Luft III, here's some of the most outrageous and brave WWII accounts we could find. The enlisted men knew they were being shipped to a POW camp
