We also compared the rates of relapse and death within 30 days after admission. The results of the analyses showed no differences between the 2 groups (Table 3{ref-type="table"}). Discussion ===== Our study evaluated the effects of tranexamic acid in patients with DIC who underwent cardiac surgery under CPB. The results showed that administration of tranexamic acid did not decrease transfusion and showed no protective effects on the mortality and transfusion rates or the hemodynamic instability of the patients. Despite the findings of large studies such as the TR-DOSE study \[@b8-kja-d-18-00021] that showed the efficacy and safety of tranexamic acid in reducing bleeding in patients undergoing cardiac surgery with CPB, the results of previous studies investigating its efficacy in other procedures are conflicting. In a study comparing perioperative and postoperative bleeding during cardiac surgery and/or coronary artery bypass surgery, tranexamic acid did not decrease transfusion requirements in a group 2d92ce491b
