Q: Proving $\int \frac{1}{\sqrt{\sin\theta}} d\theta = \int \frac{1}{\sin\theta} d\theta$

Using the following integral definitions $\int_a^b g(\theta) d\theta = \int_a^b \left[\frac{g(\theta)}{1} \right] d\theta$

$\int_a^b \frac{g(\theta)}{\cos\theta} d\theta = \int_a^b \frac{g(\theta)}{\cos\theta} d\theta$

Prove that $\int \frac{1}{\sqrt{\sin\theta}} d\theta = \int \frac{1}{\sin\theta} d\theta$

So I started doing a bit of rewriting: $\int \frac{1}{\sqrt{\sin\theta}} d\theta = \int \frac{1}{\sin^{\frac{1}{2}}\theta} \cdot \frac{\sin^{\frac{1}{2}}\theta}{\sqrt{\sin\theta}} d\theta$

And now I am having some difficulties because the result depends on the type of function that I pass in, how can I prove this equality?

A: Hint: $\sqrt{\sin\theta} = \frac{1}{\sqrt{\cos\theta}}$. The invention relates to an optical system for imaging on-axis spots of a light-emitting body, which comprises a light-condensing mirror having a light-condensing layer on a first side and a second side that is opposite to the first side and which has a curved surface. The invention also relates to a corresponding light-emitting body
