Binge Drinking: Hormonal and psychological effects Certain types of abuse are often found in people suffering from alcohol addiction. One of these is binge drinking, as it is the most common form of abuse among adolescents. Hormonal effects Binge drinking has a very high prevalence in adolescents and adults. This practice involves drinking large amounts of alcohol in one sitting. The practice has a great effect on the body's hormonal balance. In fact, binge drinkers are up to 100 times more likely to experience high blood pressure and heart disease than non-drinkers. This is due to the fact that alcohol causes a sudden surge in the levels of both testosterone and cortisol in the body. High testosterone levels disrupt both men's and women's sleep patterns, and it causes
