The uterine cervix is composed of three layers: epithelial cells, connective tissue and endometrial glands. The normal cervical epithelium is columnar, and contains different cell types including goblet, basal and parabasal cells. Histologically, ectocervix is characterized by stratified squamous epithelium, endocervix by mucinous epithelium, and endometrial glands are found at the junction of the two layers. Cervical cytology and cervical smears are routinely obtained for the diagnosis of diseases of the cervix. Cervical intraepithelial neoplasia (CIN) is a broad term for a group of lesions of the cervix which are histologically graded from CIN 1, 2 to CIN 3, 4 (or high grade squamous intraepithelial lesions, HSIL
