The trypsin catalyzed digestion of histone H3 is described. Cleavage occurs at three discrete sites at the C-terminal end of the peptide. Specificity is conferred by a short domain at the C-terminus of histone H3 which binds to and modulates the activity of trypsin. The interaction between trypsin and histone H3 is both electrostatic and hydrophobic. Affinity constants are estimated at  $(3-5) \times 10^6$  M<sup>-1</sup> by kinetic analysis of the reaction. Histone H3 is far more potent than the small peptide poly-L-glutamine, at 6-8-fold higher concentrations.
