Intra-arterial thrombectomy in acute ischemic stroke due to embolic occlusion of the carotid artery. Thrombectomy has been shown to be effective to recanalize obstructed carotid arteries due to embolism in patients presenting with acute ischemic stroke (AIS). In this study, we investigated whether intra-arterial (IA) thrombectomy can be performed at very short time intervals to avoid the risk of secondary infarctions. We retrospectively analyzed 19 patients who presented at our hospital with AIS due to acute embolic occlusion of the cervical carotid artery within 5.0 h from symptom onset. IA thrombectomy was performed using the Solitaire Thrombectomy Device. Clinical and imaging data as well as outcome (NIH Stroke Scale, mRS) were obtained. The technical success rate of the IA thrombectomy was 73% (14/19). The mean age was 63 ± 13 years, and 12 (63%) were women. An embolic source was found in 14 patients (74%). Symptomatic intracranial hemorrhage (ICH) occurred in 1 patient (5%). After a mean time of 23 ± 13 h, a reperfusion was achieved in all patients. Eighteen (95%) patients had a final mRS ≤ 2 . Intra-arterial thrombectomy can be performed in very short time intervals within 5.0 h from symptom onset, thus avoiding secondary infarctions. Most of our readers will have seen this before and might be wondering where the story came from, but it's a good one, coming from our friends at the American National Biathlon Association. The photo is of Anna Marozan, 21, of Stillwater, Minn., a Junior at the University of Minnesota, who was also named 2018 American Cross-Country Biathlon Champion on Saturday. (The American Biathlon Association, with which NATA competes, does not recognize the NCAA cross-country season, so Marozan's title is purely biathlon-oriented.) Marozan, who has already qualified for the World Championships in PyeongChang, South Korea, wrote about the huge effort it took to train
