Olefin oligomers, such as tetraenes and hexaenes, can be used as intermediate compounds for the preparation of a wide variety of fine chemical products, particularly pharmaceutical products. One promising route to these intermediates is a process that uses metallated cyclopentadienes as a starting material. For example, WO 2006/094227 teaches the hydrogenation of metallated cyclopentadiene to form n-octenes. Also, US 2006/100636 teaches the hydrogenation of metallated cyclopentadiene to form n-octenes. However, these known methods require the use of large excesses of catalyst and hydrogen gas in order to achieve high conversion. Accordingly, it is desirable to provide a process for the efficient preparation of olefin oligomers using a small amount of a metallated cyclopentadiene as starting material.
