A strong chest People sometimes ask me “How does one become a great motivational speaker or seminar leader?” My answer is: “You start with a big chest”. Then you keep putting on events to really build up that chest with speaking, workshops and seminars. Then you can either become a medical clown or a motivational keynote speaker. And maybe later, a motivational seminar leader. I have yet to decide. A big chest of iron I don’t think it’s always about the chest size. It’s about applying the right stuff. You can write great stuff, have a great seminar, but if you don’t have the right things, you won’t get much out of it. So the chest of iron is the right stuff. Iron. You do not want it to be flabby. You want to do workouts, take supplements, eat like a king and sleep like a log. You also want to have enough energy to get up every day, get motivated and feel good. The chest of iron is the right stuff to do it with, not only for your chest but also for your life. So what exactly is “the right stuff” you may wonder? The right stuff Are you familiar with the expression “the right stuff”? I don’t think you are. That’s because most of us aren’t very good at choosing things. For example, we choose to run, cycle, swim, play tennis, fly planes or attend conferences, not because we enjoy it, but because we think it is good for us. Because we think they are good for us, we even go to classes or seminars to learn these things. What we do not appreciate is the mind that chose a particular activity to do. This mental process is called “choice making”. I think we often do not realize that the mind – our mind – chooses activities to do and we do not choose it. If you understand this, I think you will know the feeling I had while being in Canada recently. Why? I had almost the right stuff to be able to give a public speech. I had done many speaking events, had the right mindset and the right training. But I decided to give a public speech on the topic that I have been learning and that I found interesting. The reason
