In the men's category, Andrea Ferraresi of Italy (42.20), Randy Macias (42.57) and Matt Held (42.59) raced for the win in the 10,000. In the women's competition, Ferraresi (44.53), Christina Evertsson (44.74) and Karol Stryczek (45.54) posted times of the day to win the race. In the men's field, Gustavo Cunha of Brazil (27:40.27) and Rodolfo Niembro (27:41.78) were the leaders throughout the final four laps. After the completion of six laps, Cunha, who was the only runner in the race to complete the six laps, was tagged out at the intermediate time check. Cunha's first-place finish was dethroned by Niembro, who settled for second place. As Cunha's finish was being marked, a mass pile-up of runners in front of the general-class chute hampered the pace of the race. At the same time, Cunha, the top-ranked runner in the general-class division, was slowed by a mistake in his warmup, which is where the race was stopped. "I could never have imagined what happened," said Cunha, who is a member of the U.S. team. "It was a tremendous mess. After that, we were just trying to stay upright and get out of the way of everybody." With the rest of the field held up, the race was restarted with a half-mile gap between the front runners and last. "I thought I could make up some ground, but then I saw the people from the front and I was out of luck," said Niembro, who added that he couldn't see Cunha's crash ahead of him. The top-two runners

New techniques in drug therapy of angina pectoris. The medical treatment of angina pectoris is based on the use of calcium antagonists, beta-blockers, nitrates, or combinations thereof. Results of some studies suggest that in some patients with severe disease, a high dose of nicorandil may be beneficial, and in other patients a low dose of nicorandil should be given. Calcium antagonists may have a less effect on the blood pressure than do nitrates. In the beta-blocker treated patients with an elevated left ventricular ejection fraction, the effect of increasing the dose of beta-blocker is still to be shown. In the patient with an impaired ventricular function (left ventricular ejection fraction Jav (disambiguation) Jav (जव) is a name in Indian languages of South Asia.
