Prospective, randomized, controlled study. University-affiliated hospital. Twenty-four healthy sheep, weighing 35-50 kg. Sheep were anesthetized and ventilated with CV, HFV, or HFOV. During the 1-h protocol, we measured oxygenation, hemodynamics, airway pressure, the amount of tidal volume, mean airway pressure, the fraction of inspired oxygen (FIO2), and mean airway pressure. Arterial and mixed venous oxygen tension and blood gases, blood flow, and cardiac index were measured. Pulmonary microvascular permeability was evaluated by the extravascular lung water to total lung water ratio. Arterial blood gases, arterial oxygenation, and arterial carbon dioxide tension. HFOV was superior to CV and HFV for improving arterial oxygenation (P =.001). HFOV induced the lowest pulmonary microvascular permeability. No adverse effects were observed.
