Instruction: Change& The Cuneiform (J.L.) is a method of writing in clay or other soft material with a pointed instrument such as a reed, stiff brush, or finger. Whereas modern script uses the same design features, the ancient method of a wedge-shaped "radix" or styl was a characteristic element of Sumerian cuneiform.Cuneiform is found most commonly in Mesopotamia, Babylon and ancient Egypt. The system is similar to that in later Fraktur scripts; the difference is that the Sumerian and Babylonian cuneiforms were more cursive than the later Fraktur (made up of the characters and later forms), and the Sumerian cuneiforms lacked most of the "joining" strokes.Cuneiform writing has a very long history. Evidence is found in Egypt and Mesopotamia, to the latter being the oldest. The earliest known Sumerian cuneiform texts are from around 3300 BC., and the oldest Egyptian cuneiform texts are from around 2200 BC.Cuneiform was invented by the ancient Sumerians of Mesopotamia around 3100 BC., although it was not developed into a full-fledged system of writing until the Middle Dynasty period. The first ever recorded written language is ancient Sumerian cuneiform. Most of the world's languages are written in some form of the Latin alphabet. Cuneiform was widely used during the Ancient NearNaval and Roman Empires in Mesopotamia, Egypt, Asia Minor and Asia. The best known examples of Egyptian cuneiform are inscribed on the stone walls and wood facings of pyramids and other building.
