It is just as easy to use as I would expect from a free software and it has been a life saver." ★★★★★Secure, encrypted, instant messaging, with reliable global network.★★★★★ Ricochet is an all-in-one private instant messaging client that supports secure chatting over Tor & … [Read more...] Today's guest post comes from Dan Fouts, the CEO and cofounder of OpenDNS. We asked Dan to talk about the latest "issues" that have been around as of late, and to discuss what the issues are and what OpenDNS has done to help tackle these issues. When push comes to shove, some programs really are worth it Ever wonder what's going on when your computer freezes? It's extremely annoying and disruptive. Instead of messing with all sorts of cryptic text file, you can have OpenDNS handle all that for you. Without that, you'd have to rely on the help of the local IT team. Unfortunately, they would probably come over to your house, reboot your PC, and then leave. OpenDNS has a proactive approach to online issues that work almost instantly. When OpenDNS detects and blocks something, it's like a local IT tech walking through the door and handing off the problem to them. It is delivered to OpenDNS in the form of DNS. The DNS is the directory that every website needs in order to run properly. From Yahoo.com's homepage to Google's, right down to the local coffee shop's website — all it needs is a DNS entry and you'll be up and running in no time. The DNS is the foundation of the Web and like most things in life, it's never perfect. Sometimes it gets blocked or connections times out. That's when OpenDNS comes in and fixes it for you. The DNS has 8.8 billion entries, which is around 1,000 times what a normal DNS has. This means when OpenDNS catches some sort of problem, it goes to work right away. They take a look at the root node of a website and dig down to determine the IP address for each DNS, which is the address that you need to connect with the site. OpenDNS is currently one of the world's largest domain name registries. The company goes after the.com,.org and.net domains. Because it's doing such a great job at DNS, they get special DNS exemptions and are granted access to these sites. This way, if there's a problem, they can clear it right away. Unfortunately, the same couldn't be 09e8f5149f
