the small screen. For the iPhone, Photoshop has now been made more compact, faster, easier to use and even better looking.

The new app is more than just a cut down version of the Mac or PC version. It's a slightly stripped down version of the Photoshop editing software. With the new release, Photoshop makes sure to cater for iPhone users as it has been made to fit on the much smaller screen. You can easily add graphics to your photos, edit them and even combine them with other elements to produce some impressive results. You can also edit images in full-screen on the new iPhone. To cater for the iPhone, most of the features in Photoshop have been reconfigured in a way that it works best for the device. If you've never edited images before, the app makes it easier to create and edit images. It's easy to change and adjust your photos – no need to load up an image editor and fiddle around with color and brightness. No more trying to adjust colors in your photo by using the physical controls on the screen – this is done through the new Photo Filters feature, which lets you give your photos just the look you're looking for.

N-acetylcysteine for treatment of quinine-associated photodermatitis. Quinine, an effective antimalarial drug that is commonly used to prevent malaria in travelers, may produce phototoxicity. Prolonged photosensitivity due to quinine ingestion, quinine-associated photodermatitis, is characterized by a skin eruption that usually resolves on the third or fourth day following the sunburn injury. We present a case of quinine-associated photodermatitis in a man who presented with a six-day history of a painful skin eruption. The eruption had not been preceded by phototesting, but was believed to be an initial manifestation of the photosensitivity associated with quinine ingestion. Six hours after taking orally available N-acetylcysteine (600 mg three times a day), the redness, pain, and scaling resolved within 12 hours. This suggests that a cysteineless compound could play a role in treatment of quinine-associated photodermatitis.
