Q: How to read two separate csv files in python? I have two csv files of different types as follows: File 1: Z=zxy_ABC (c); Z=zxy_DEF (c); File 2: S=2; M=7; T=1; Here in File 2, I have different column names in the same row for different column names for same thing in File 1. I want to read these two files and calculate the corresponding values. A: You can do this like this: First, read file 1 and create a dictionary: with open('file1.csv') as file: file_dict = {'Z':[], 'S':[]} # We use a dictionary here for line in file: (column, value) = line.split(',') file_dict['Z'].append(value) file_dict['S'].append(int(column)) Then, read file 2, get file 1's column names: columns = [k for k in file2.readline().strip().split(',') if k in file1_dict] Then, read file 1 and get file 2's values: file1_vals = {k: float(v) for k, v in file1.readlines()} # use csv library to get float values for row in file2.readlines(): for k, v in zip(columns, file1_vals.get(k)): # use zip to get the values for every column print(v+row[k:]) # print every row and the value for that row for every column Q: How can I save an HTML code as a hyperlink in a list item? I would like to understand how to create an HTML link in a list item. As the user adds items, I'd like for there to be links that direct to the site. I think the new HTML5 web application stuff I'm seeing in the papers is analogous to what I want to do, however, the examples all seem a little too complicated for me to make
