The data is captured from professional player motion capture suits that enable players to play for their clubs, and consists of real-time and depth-shaded animation, which was recorded at a speed of between 12 and 24 frames per second. "With HyperMotion Technology, we can now offer a more realistic feel to the passing and shooting of the ball. By replicating player movements in-game, FIFA 22 will make you feel more connected to the action, providing you with the sense of teamwork that makes it the complete football experience," said Andreas Seith, FIFA creative director. In order to ensure the best experience possible for players with the new technology, the following key areas of gameplay have been altered: FIFA 22 introduces the new "Baseball Pass System" (BPS), which provides an authentic simulation of a tight pass played in a wide space. The ball is only allowed to pass sideways. This technique allows passing and shooting on the run to be more realistic. However, with the increased speed of passing gameplay, the ball is allowed to travel further and cover longer distances. The BPS system enables the player to pass the ball into a space where the defender is in his own half of the field, similar to passing the ball into an empty net. The size of the passing area is ideal for driving forward passes. The BPS is a critical aspect for delivering the authentic experience of the game. Its development had to be tailored to the specific game mechanics and match speed. FIFA 22 uses the VFX Group's DUST3D engine. The engine has been enhanced by adding an additional layer of physics, which allows the engine to enable the simulation of various interactions between the player and the ball. The engine provides the realism and fluidity of gameplay, which has been indispensable to the development of the BPS. The BPS system is an essential part of FIFA's gameplay in and out of possession. The engine's simulation of on-field interaction is key to delivering a more realistic game experience. With the BPS in FIFA 22, players are able to play through intense pressure and achieve the most difficult tasks in a much more realistic way. The new "Pitch Time" system makes players more dynamic and realistic. The system increases the speed of the game by developing an acceleration field for players. This helps players from running out of breath on short sprints, giving the ball more momentum, which provides the player with
