The carp PRL-inducible protein gene, PAIP2 (PAI domain-containing protein), was cloned using a double hybridization screening method. A 1.2 kb PAIP2 cDNA was isolated from the liver of carp fed under long-term PRL stimulation. It encoded a predicted protein of 178 amino acid residues with a nuclear localization signal and an acidic patch. Multiple amino acid alignments of PAIP2 revealed that it is one of the members of the PAI subfamily of protease inhibitors that have an N-terminal PAI domain. Northern blot analysis indicated the significant expression of PAIP2 in the liver and brain, and its expression was apparently induced by PRL administration. In situ hybridization showed that the PAIP2 gene was expressed in tissues known to be involved in hematopoiesis, including granulopoiesis, erythropoiesis, and myelopoiesis.(CNN) The volume of chemicals used to make cocaine and other illicit drugs has reached a record high, according to the US Drug Enforcement Administration.
