A: According to your log entry, you could have installed other version of Home Designer from other media or connection other than Microsoft's website. Maybe, you have some up to date version of Home Designer already. You could try to uninstall the existing version, then reinstall it from the Software Center, and try again. If it doesn't work out, please post your log entry again, and the additional information, such as the version of Home Designer that you have. Q: Glyph in an Android program I'm new to Android development, so please excuse the question. I'm developing a very simple Android program which basically takes a text input from user, and displays on screen a smiley face with an emoji icon next to it. My questions is: which is the best way to implement the "emoji" in my Android program? To use EmojiPackage.EmojiRegistry? Here is an example of how my program would look like. A: An ImageView with an EmojilImage will do the job. In order to manage the image and the emoji use the EmojiUtils class for everything. Here is an example of how to do it. A: You can use the following for the Emoji set Q: Extending data types - dynamic vs static If I wish to extend the data types of Java, is it better to write my own class, or just use an existing class and modify it for my purposes? For example, if I want to add a field to java.util.ArrayList: public static ArrayList add("String"); or public class ExtendedList extends ArrayList { static final List EMPTY = new ArrayList(); private ExtendedList() { } public static ExtendedList add(String s) { return new ExtendedList();
