FIG. 1 illustrates a shoe 10 including a midsole 22 that provides cushioning, and a sole 30 that is integral with the midsole 22. The sole 30 provides traction and absorbs energy that would otherwise be transmitted into the foot and leg. As illustrated, the shoe 10 may be formed of various component parts assembled in the fabrication of the shoe. The various component parts can be molded or stamped from sheets of plastic materials. Plastic materials are particularly suitable for such component parts, because they can be relatively easily and inexpensively molded to manufacture the component parts for use in a shoe. During manufacturing, components for the sole 30 or other parts for the shoe 10 may be molded of
